Complaints Shelve Rate Request

ROCKDALE

Met with a barrage of complaints about telephone service, Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. representatives heard their requested rate increase in Rockdale put on the shelf indefinitely by city councilmen Tuesday. At the end of an hour-long discussion at City Hall, aldermen tabled the Bell request and stated they felt citizens of Rockdale were entitled to better service before their phone rates were raised.

The bond issue is designed to provide sewer facilities to the 29 percent of the residences not now on the city sewer system.

Georgetown Votes To Stay Dry

GEORGETOWN

Williamson County's Justice Precinct 1 is still dry — just like it has been since 1884 -- so said voters Saturday in the local option election to decide whether beer and wine could be sold for off premises consumption in Georgetown and the immediate surrounding area. A record turnout of voters for a special election, 1980 of them, braved the cold, wet and windy weather Saturday to have their say at the polls. The vote was 1177 against and 803 for.

13 Degree Low Follows Snow In Milam Area

Milam Countians woke to a "winter wonderland" Thursday morning following a three-inch snowfall during the night. The snow, on top of sleet, made driving hazardous before sunshine Friday began melting the white stuff.

Schools were closed in the county until Friday morning, when the Cameron schools reopened, the only one in the county to do so. Two school buses had to be pulled out of ditches before delivery of students could be made Friday morning. The partially melted slush on streets and roadways froze into a ice glaze as a 13-degree low was registered Friday morning, a record for the year.

Numerous vehicles, including several heavy trucks, slid off highways in the county into roadside ditches.

Snow depths in Central Texas ranged from 1 1/2 to 4 1/2 inches, heaviest snowfall since 1966.

Snow began falling in the Milam area about 9:30 p.m. Wednesday and fell most of the night. By dawn, the area was covered by an unruffled shroud of white.

Cameron recorded a fresh flurry of snow Thursday morning, with the sun attempting to peek through dense grey clouds.

And by nightfall, traffic had transformed snow to slush on city streets and snowmen had appeared on lawns throughout the city.

FHA Approves $200,000 Loan For Pond Creek

The Farmers Home Administration has approved a $200,000 loan to the Pond Creek Watershed Authority of Falls and Milam Counties, FHA Administrator James V. Smith announced.

Funds will enable the Authority to prevent flooding and damage to roads and bridges through erosion, provide domestic and livestock water to several communities in the watershed area.

Repayable in 40 years at 3.649 percent interest, the loan is financed under the Rural Community Facilities program of the Farmers Home Administration, a Department of Agriculture rural credit service.

Judge Proclaims 'Symphony Day'

UR AGENCY VIEWS PLANS FOR MALL AREA

Final plans for mall and street work in the city's urban renewal area are being finalized by the Urban Renewal Board and engineers, according to a report from A. W. McCullin, UR executive director.

McCullin said he spent the day with engineers in Houston last week, going over details of the city's program.

He said one of the problems in the street engineering plans was that some of the streets have gotten bad since the original plans had been drawn up in 1968, and another big problem is street drainage. Four new points of drainage will have to be added in the area.

Work is still moving ahead on rehabilitation areas, with the Leader building complete, and work going on in the Curtis building, Bass building, Eixman building and the Stewart building. Dusek's is also rehabbing the area formerly occupied by a barber shop, McCullin said.

At a meeting of the urban renewal board Monday night, the final drawing on the mall area was displayed. One of the changes recommended is the widening of First and Main streets in the mall area from 5 to 7 feet for better traffic flow, he added.

Preliminary work on the mall will be started soon, when engineering on the area has been completed.

McCullin said the city will be contacted to do the demolition work on walks and curbs for a credit item in the overall work.

The Urban Renewal Agency is advertising properties for sale in the area and several enquires have been received. McCullin said the agency hopes to close on some of the properties soon.

Complex News Times...

U. S. Senator Bentson of Houston, is introducing a bill in the 93rd Congress allowing newsmen the right to protect news sources.

Two newsmen have been jailed in this country in recent months for not revealing news sources before grand jury hearings.

In Texas, three bills relating to news coverage, broader open meeting laws and confidence of news sources to reporters will be introduced in the new Legislature.

If the public's right to know is to be upheld, reporters confidential sources on controversial stories should be as inviolate as the attorney - client, doctor - patient, clergy - layman confidence acknowledged in court.

This assumes the confidential nature of the news source is based on reliable information, not some subrosa attempt to subvert the news development process.

If a reporter can be held in contempt of court, the case twice in Los Angeles and New Jersey, in a grand jury hearing, he will be less aggressive on citing information in news coverage.

The newspaper reporter is the only reporter in the news field not directly controlled by federal license. Electronic media, television and radio, are licensed by the federal government for use of particular frequencies. These licenses are subject to review. Newspapers and other print media face no such limitation, only the open competition of the marketplace.

If reporters can get public information in public meetings and public records, can adequately fill in with privileged source material, which is reliable of course, then the public will more likely know what goes on in the public's business.

We hope Senator Bentson's legislation and the three bills going before the Texas Legislature are given full audience and approval. The First Amendment needs these supplementary supports in complex news times.

Plans Reported Dropped For East German Car

By Colin McIntyre

EAST BERLIN

East Germany and Czechoslovakia have suddenly dropped without any official explanation plans for joint production of a new "Peoples Car"-- a small, four cylinder vehicle that was expected to become one of eastern Europes' most ambitious economic ventures.

First reports began circulating in East Berlin and Prague more than two years ago that planning was under way to produce the new vehicle in East Gemanys' two car plants-Wartburg and Trabant and at Czechoslovakias giant Skoda Works.

Among the reasons for the proposed joint venture was the fact that East Germany, with a population of 17 million and only 1,500-000 cars, badly needed greater production to fulfil public demand.

There is currently a six-year waiting list for the 1,000 c.c. Wartburg despite its high cost of 18,500 marks (about $5,000).

Both the Wartburg and the other East German - produced car, the Trabant, are powered by tiny two-cylinder engines which are greater polluters of the atmosphere than the larger four-cylinder power unit, it was argued.

Car production in East Germany and Czechoslovakia at present is on a relatively small scale--134,000 and 123,000 respectively each year. Experts in both countries said an annual minimum production of 300,000 was needed to become economical.

Rumors of the joint production plans were confirmed last summer and the East European press began reporting the shape, size and production target of the "Skoda-Wartburg" as the new vehicle was dubbed.

Only last August East Berlin radio announced that East Germany would completely stop its own car production by 1975 and would begin building the new car in the Wartburg factory at Eisenach and the Trabant works at Zwickau. Czechoslovakia would also produce the same car in the Skoda factory at Mlada Boleslav.

"We should not be sentimental about this," the radio warned listerners who might regret the phasing out of purely East German vehicles. Technical and Economic realities had to be recognized and the two-cylinder engined car was no longer a viable proposition in the long term because of the huge increase in road traffic and the engines' high-pollution characteristic.

At the same time, the radio commentary damped down specualtion about a sudden car explosion in East Germany.

To avoid the "absurd" overcrowding on America, Japanese and West German roads, "We must have a clear idea of how many cars we want in our country in the next decade and how we can restrict their number so that our cities and environment will not be destroyed," it said.

Hungarian press reports said the new car would be supplied with electrical components made in Hungary and total production of the vehicle would reach 400,-000 annually after 1975.

The Hungarian press also disclosed the projected car would have a four-cylinder 1,100 CC engine developed by Skoda, front-wheel drive and would resemble a Fiat 125. East German and Czechoslovak versions would have slightly different body styling.

When the decisions to scrap the entire plan was made remains a mystery.

It was at the Leipzig Trade Fair in September that a press spokesman for Wartburg disclosed that both the Wartburg and Trabant vehicles would not only continue in production after 1975 but would be further developed.

And, early in December a well-informed East German source confirmed that the entire project had run aground, advancing these reasons:

-- East Germany had developed a new anti-pollution device which was claimed capable of reducing exhaust fumes from two-cylinder engines to a tolerable level.

--East Germany had purchased from West Germanys' auto-union a licence to manufacture a 60 horsepower two-cylinder engine.

German Sign Historic Tready

By Colin Mcintyre

EAST BERLIN

East and West Germany signed a historic "Good Neighbor" treaty here which will round off one key phase in a three-year-old detente process in Europe and usher in another.

Signed by the two men who laboriously negotiated it--state secretaries Egon Bahr of Bonn and Michael Kohl of East Berlin--the treaty ackonwledges the post-war division of Germany into two independent states, and opens the way for their entry to the United Nations.

It also marks a huge step towards ending the cold war between East and West, whose direct effects were felt more in Europe than anywhere else in the world. And it opens the way for wider, multilateral East-West contacts at a European security conference and for talks on mutual balanced force reductions in Europe.

It was only natural that the first steps in this process should involve Germany. The defeat of Nazi Germany and its subsequent division into four occupied zones gave rise to two German states competing in better rivalry, and West Berlin, a western city marooned in a hostile East German Sea.

In addition the West German constitution refused to recognize the post-war Oder-Neisse border of Poland, which put a large chunk of former German territory in Polish hands.

This state of affairs led to frequent inter-German flare-ups which often embroiled other countries of the communist east and the capitalish west in tests of strength between the two warring ideologies.

Some of the most nerve-racking situations developed around West Berlin, whose life-giving road, rail and air access routes to the west were sometimes threatened by communist harassment, posing a constant danger of a major confrontation between the Soviet Union and the Big Three western allies.

All this began to change when Herr Willy Brandt was elected Chancellor of West Germany in 1969 and immediately announced his policy of seeking a reconciliation with Eastern Europe.

With surprising speed, compared to the years of rigidity that had gone before, his govern nent completed treaties of understanding with the Soviet Union and Poland--the latter acknowledging the Oder-Neisse line.

A four-power agreement on Berlin followed, which allows West Berliners once more to visit East Berlin and East Germany, and eases access between the city and West Germany. Now comes the inter-German treaty which signals the crowning sucess of Herr Brandt's policy and ends a complete chapter in post-war German history.

Spending Binge Affects Japan

By Geoffrey Murray

TOKYO

New Year Japanese style has become an excuse for a spending binge - and the more bizaare and expensive the gift the better.

Festive season 1972 sees Japanese department stores offering apples at seven dollars and melons at up to 20 dollars each, as well as 2,000 year old Greenland Glacier ice for whisky drinkers.

On Sundays so far this month, some stores have been recording record one-day sales of up to eight million dollars.

Another symbol of the new affluent Japan is a betting record set by Japanese racing fans at the last major meeting of the year, on-and off- course betting on the Arima Memorial Race--which lasted two minutes 38 seconds--was about 34 million dollars. This easily beat last years' Japan Derby when 30 million dollars was taken in bets.

Apart from spending their money on gifts, Japanese will also traditionally be on the move at New Years.

Christmas day was just another working day, although Japanese have taken to the other aspects of the festival, such as excessive drinking.

But at New Year the country closes down for almost a week and an estimated 20 million people--about a fifth of the population--will be heading for country homes, abroad or to ski resorts for the longest break they are likely to enjoy in the year.

The big spending spree started early in December when fat bonuses, often representing several months salary, were handed out.

The money doesn't stay in pockets long. Department stores and bars this year are chuckling at increased profits and dreaming of new ways to catch any extra yen still floating around.

One department store is offering Greenland arctic ice in two pound packs for two dollars. It claims that the natural, pollution-free ice releases ancient air into whisky to improve the taste.

And, almost as important, the Greenland variety has a more musical tinkle as it is dropped in the glass than ordinary Tokyo tap water ice.

The store imported five tons of ice from the Greenland trade department, and it reports fast sales despite the fact that it costs 20 times more than ordinary ice.

Another store is selling what must be the worlds' most expensive apples. One "super number one" apple weighting about one-and-a-half pounds, is selling for seven dollars. Officials say the apple is expensive because it is still experimental.

So far, buyers have been few and far between. The same applies to melons grown near Mount Fuji which are being sold for up to 20 dollars.

Stores, however, report no shortage of customers for gold pieces and diamond rings. First prize must go to one of the smaller department stores which proudly announced it had sold a ring worth 100,000 dollars.

Electric heating. Sure cure for the shivers.

It's gentle, clean and quiet and it warms you deep down—like a sunny day. With electric home heating you can warm the chilly corners and do away with the icy drafts around your ankles. Whether you're remodeling, replacing an inadequate heating system or planning a new home, there's an electric heating system just right for you.

An electric furnace forces warm air wall to wall in winter. An electric heat pump does the heating job in the winter and also cools you in summer. Space heaters warm up the difficult spots. Baseboard heating eases even warmth across your floors and up to the ceiling. Radiant ceiling or wall panels are great for add-on rooms and allow you individual-room temperature control. Before another winter chills you, let a TP&L representative help you select the electric heating that's best for your home.

Write or call your TP&L Service Representative for a free computerized heating estimate. It will include size and type of heating equipment needed and will give a month-by-month estimate of your electricity bill.

Nixon Mission To Peking Projects China Into World

By Jonathan Sharp

PEKING

For China, the western year just ended was memorable first and foremost for the visit paid here in February by President Nixon--what the American leader himself called "The week that changed the world."

In that week, the world watched with awe as Nixon chatted with Chairman Mao Tse-Tung, strolled among the gilded palaces of the Forbidden City, and clinked glassed with Premier Chou En Lai in the Great Hall of the People while a Chinese army band played "America the Beautiful."

The Nixon mission did not put an immediate end to the difference between the worlds wealthiest nation and the worlds most populous.

But it ended a generation-old feud in which an atmosphere of hostility and suspicion was the accepted state of affairs, and it opened up a positive dialogue between the leaders of nations at opposite ends of the worlds' ideological spectrum.

It also projected China more fully into the arena of world politics. Peking seemed to have discarded once and for all the traditional mentality of introspection symbolized by the name "The Middle Kingdom."

The Nixon visit was a spectacular climax for Chinas' outgoing foreign policy which began a year earlier with the humble bounce of a table-tennis ball in the era of "ping-pong diplomacy."

No less momentous, in Asian terms, than Nixons' visit was the journey to Peking by Japans' new premier, Kakuei Tanaka, to negotiate and sign the agreement establishing diplomatic relations and formally ending what Japanese Foreign Minister Masayoshi Ohira described as "The Dark past of Sino-Japanese relations."

Japans' agreement with China automatically ended its recognition of Taiwan, where the Nationalist Chinese regime of Chiang Iai Shek has become increasingly isolated since the communist took over its seat at the United Nations in October, 1971.

October this year saw another foreign policy milestone for China with the signing of an agreement establishing diplomatic relations with West Germany, Chinas' second largest trading partner. West German Foreign Minister Walter Schell signed the agreement in Peking with his Chinese counterpart, Chi Peng Fei.

To the political significance of these events must be added the deep satisfaction felt in Peking that on each occasion it was China which played the host. In Chinese eyes, the foreigner came to Peking to make his peace.

At the year's end the prospect was held out of fresh recognition for Peking: from Australia and New Zealand under their new labor governments.

Chinas' relations with the Soviet Union, however, have remained in a state of frigid enmity since the two countries drew back from the brink of war after border clashes in 1969. Talks between the two countries on their border dispute moved into their fourth year without any indication of a settlement.

In other respects, 1972 must be counted a breathtaking personal triumph for Premier Chou En Lai, who most observers believe is the moving spirit behind Chinas' new outgoing foreign policy toward the non-communist world.

His personal stature in China has risen in the past few years above all other figures in the leadership hierarchy except Mao Tse Tung.

Mao, who turned 79 on Dec. 26 and chairman of the Chinese communist party for nearly 40 years, has become a more remote figure in public affairs in recent years, after his dominant role in the ideological conflicts of the cultural revolution in the late 1960s.

But Chou makes it clear that Mao still gives the philosophical and ideological guidance on broad principles of policy while Chou himself supervises the administration.

This year Mao emerged briefly to hold audiences with important foreign guests, including Nixon and Tanaka, but made no appearances before the Chinese public.

The continued failure to convene the National Peoples Congress, the countrys' "parliament" which was expected to meet in 1971, is taken by some observers as an indication that issues of basic policy have still to be settled.

On the economic front there was a disappointment. Chou, in an interview with Scandinavian journalists, disclosed that Chinas' grain harvest was expected to be four per cent down from last year due to drought in some areas and floods in others.

The setback was underlined in an article in the theoretical journal Red Flag which urged the people to save a mouthful of grain a day in order to conserve stocks and build up reserves.

Whatever the internal problems, the public face that China presented in 1972 was one of a stable hard-working nation dedicated to erasing its traditional image of poverty and backwardness.

There was a notable easing away from doctrinaire conformity in everyday life. Historical works from Chinese literature have begun to appear in Chinese bookshops, and there has been official encouragement for greater variety and imagination in dress.

China was exposed to the gaze of the outside world as never before through the eyes of foreign newspaper and television journalists who visited the country to cover the years' climactic events in Peking and elsewhere.

But it is doubtful whether the average Chinese ever realized his motherland was enjoying such a vogue abroad, since his view of other countries was still carefully controlled by Chinese official media.

But China has indicated its willingness to quicken the pace of official and people to people exchanges, and the prospects are that, eventually, the clouds of mutual ignorance will be dispalled.

Local Farmers Listed In Survey

Three farmers from the Cameron area have been included in the 1972 Yield Survey for Central and South Texas published by Pioneer Hi-Bred Company of Plainview. To qualify for listing, each farmer was asked to submit a report of the Pioneer brand seeds he planted, the conditions of weather and fertility under which they were grown, and the yield per acre.

Compiled from information in these reports, the Yield Survey lists farmer's hometown, variety planted, yield and farmer's name. A county-by-county listing of average yields for corn and sorghum varieties without brand reference is also included.

Area farmers listed in the survey are Henry Gonzales, Willis and J. A. Looney.

Copies of the Yield Survey are available free of charge from Pioneer dealers.

The Informed Consumer

This is the final column in a series entitled "The Informed Consumer." At this time I want to express my appreciation for the warm reception these articles have received from so many readers.

I also want to give a verbal pat-on-the-back to all of the many Texas newspapers who have run the columns. By doing so you have performed a public service for your readers and your efforts are genuinely appreciated by my staff and me.

Remember, most of our Texas business men are honest, but there are sharp dealers everywhere. You should learn to spot them because once you sign the contract or complete the sale, you may be stuck. In this last column I will list some do's and dont's to help you protect yourself.

Good rules to follow are:

Never sign anything you have not read or cannot understand. Take time to read any document. Once you sign it, you may be bound with a legal obligation even though it was not a fair or honest deal. If you cannot understand the language of the document, contact your private attorney for legal counsel.

Turn off the high pressure salesman and take time to think for yourself. Ask him to stop talking so you can read the contract and make up your own mind. Be cautious when confronted by a salesman who won't stop talking or won't let you read the contract outside his presence.

Fight the temptations of referral selling. This scheme offer the consumer the chance to make a quick killing by simply supplying names of friends and relatives as prospective customers.

Refuse to deal with stores that "bait and switch" and will not adjust your complaints fairly and promptly. If a product is advertised as "bait" to get you into the store, but the salesman offers only higher priced goods complain to the manufacturer of that line of products and stop shopping at that store.

Be on the alert for final big payment financing. It's called "balloon note" financing -- small monthly payments -- then a final, unexpected, big payment.

There's no "easy" way to earn money at home. You find later there is not market for what you produce, on your efforts are "not up to standards." Most schemes require you to buy something in order to earn.

Don't pay for a neighbor's package. It may turn out to be unordered junk that your neighbor hasn't ordered and doesn't want!

You may risk your life or your money on quick 'cures." If you are worried about your health -- see your doctor. Don't take a chance on quack medicines or mail-order cures.

Vanity can cost you money or health. No known product or service can -- reduce your weight by -- massages, belts, girdles, sweath baths, creames; grow your hair; make you taller; develop your bust; remove or prevent wrinkles.

The above rules, if followed will help you avoid being victimized by deceptive trade practices.

AUSTIN

The state's police officers are better qualified to cope with the crime problem than they ever have been, Governor Preston Smith said today in releasing the "1973 Criminal Justice Plan for Texas."

In a letter prefacing the updating five-year plan, developed by the Criminal Justice Council staff, the governor noted that CJC funding has helped to develop peace officer training programs statewide.

He said that updated communications enable law enforcement officers to send messages across the state in seconds, where hours or days were required before.

Criminal justice information systems have been developed, with on-line teletype access to computer-stored data at both state and national levels, the governor said.

The 1973 plan projects spending of more than 29 million dollars in federal funds to support crime-fighting projects in the state this year. On approval of the plan by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, that agency will award the state its annual block grant.

This year for the first time the state will contribute some three million dollars, made available by the Criminal Justice Planning Fund, created by the 62nd Legislature. This state contribution will have the effect of reducing the local match required from 25 to 15 percent of total project cost in most cases.

Gause News

Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Varner and Mr. and Mrs. W.L. Litto are home from an enjoyable holiday viaction in Mexico City, Mexico.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Pierce, Tammy and Samantha of McDade visited last Sunday afternoon with Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Lee, Craig, Kelly, Lance and Kristi.

Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Coats and children of Tyler spent the New Years weekend with Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Coats, Sherri, Ray and Kevin.

Mr. and Mrs. "Tee Joe" Marks and Traci of Houston spent the weekend with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Simmons.

Mrs. Larl (Frances) Hardcastle is home from Texarkana where she had eye surgery during the holidays. She spent a few days last week in Hearne General hospital but is now home from there.

We have a number of our citizens who have been under the weather with the flu virus that is going around. Hope all are feeling better soon.

Regina Miller of Milano spent Saturday with her cousins, Craig, Kelly, Lance and Kristi Lee.

There doesn't seem to be much going on around here this week. Maybe the weather has been too miserable or maybe everyone is recovering from the holidays. I feel like maybe I should do something for Mrs. Ethel and Mrs. Dorsie to show my appreciation to them. (For all that don't know, they are Kelly's and Craig's school teachers). And I'm sure there are a lot of mothers that feel the same way, after the holidays!

A brown boxy case, similar to a small overnight case was lost Saturday or Sunday (Christmas Eve) here in Gause. It has a handle. Also a mirror in the inside of the top. The contents were all baby items. A $5.00 reward is being offered for the return of this case and all of its contents. Bessie Wise or Gloria Beth Lange Deluna can identify the case and contents if anyone can find it.

Maybe hopes should be for a better year in 73 than we had in 72, but instead I hope we have as good a year in 73 as we had in 72. It's sometime hard to realize that things could be a lot worse.

MENTAL HEALTH MATTERS

Bertram S. Brown, M.D., Director
National Institute of Mental Health

Childhood imagination, strict parents, and genetics may all be keys to whether a person can be hypnotized readily, according to a Stanford University research team world-famous for its studies of hypnosis.

They recently found that persons who are easily hypnotized usually have similar backgrounds. As children, they frequently used their imagination to detach themselves from reality, and, although each had enjoyed a warm relationship with his mother, severe discipline was part of the childhood picture in many cases.

Many persons who are easily hypnotized also report having learned as children to tune out unpleasantness, including parental punishment or lengthy scoldings.

This suggests, the researchers say, that some children develop the ability to "tune out" reality and that this ability is sharpened by their need or desire to escape stress in their environment.

These new findings support earlier data from the research group which indicate that a major factor in hypnotizability is the capacity to become deeply involved in some activity or interest such as reading, music, religion, or dramatics.

In these pursuits, they say, "ordinary reality is temporarily set aside, as indeed it is in hypnosis."

In addition to understanding the psychological mechanisms involved, the Stanford team is also interested in the practical applications of hypnosis, such as for relief of pain in childbirth, dentistry, and burns. They are also studying hypnosis' potential usefulness in alleviating the pain of cancer patients, in treating drug addicts and alcoholics, and in changing the attitudes of elderly patients in nursing homes to improve their adjustment and prolong their life expectancy.

Nazi Criminals Reported Seen

By Albert Clack

BUENOS AIRES

Nazi war criminals have been reported seen in half a dozen Latin American countries this year, but none has been brought to justice.

The latest report, by a London newspaper, that Martin Bormann, Hitler's deputy, was almost arrested in Argentina in October, was the second alleged Bormann sighting in eight months.

The first ended in anticlimax after a 72-year old German recluse was taken by police from his home in the Colombian jungle last March, following a speculative magazine story.

He was brought to the provincial city of Pasto while police investigated, but they finally announced he was just "a nice old man" who had come to South America in 1926.

The incident turned out to be one of many detours in the hunt for Nazis reported to have hidden in Latin America when Adolf Hitler's "Thousand Year Reich" collapsed in 1945.

Over the years, two prominent Nazi war criminals have been caught and brought out of Latin American countries--Adolf Eichmann and Franz Stangl, commander of the Treblinka death camp in Poland.

Eichmann, a leading Nazi bureaucrat, was grabbed by Israeli agents in Argentina in 1960 and whisked out of the country. Tried in Israel, he was executed in 1962 for his part in the killing of six million Jews during World War II.

Stangl, arrested in Sao Paulo, Brazil, where he had lived and worked for 17 years, was extradited to West Germany, convicted of the murder of Jews and later died in prison.

Bormann, the most wanted Nazi of all, could be 72 if he is alive today. He disappeared in the final days of the war as Berlin fell to the advancing Russians. German witnesses later said they believed he was killed in the fighting, but rumors have persisted that he escaped to South America.

Vienna-based Nazi-hunter Simon Wiesenthal, who has helped track down hundreds of men wanted for war crimes, believes there is a 50-50 chance Bormann is still alive.

But Wiensenthal said in Vienna that he was skeptical of the latest reported sighting. He said there had been "about 25 to 30 false Bormanns since the war" and that Nazis in South America deliberately created false trails to set up diversions.

Cafe Theater Now Popular In Paris

By Gilbert Sedbon

PARIS

The French love of cafes and theaters has found a new expression, the cafe-theater, rapidly becoming one of the most popular features of Paris night-life.

A direct descendant of the literary cabaret, the cafe-theater provides light after dinner entertainment over drinks in an informal and cosy atmosphere. Programs include burlesque, vaudevilles, excerpt from classical and modern drama, political satire and biting comments on life in contemporary society.

Cafe-theaters are becoming the favorite haunts for young people seeking pleasant surroundings to vent their criticisms of the political and social system, and for intellectuals and high society Frenchmen always in search of new "dans le vent" (with it) entertainment.

Every month or so, a new cafe-theater pops up in the Latin Quarter, Le Marias, Montmartre or else where in the Francn capital. There are now more than 20 in operation, and the nature of the programs often differs widely.

The literary cabaret served as the cradle for many theatrical personalities and inspired dramatic movements.

Max Reinhardt, Oscar Straus, and later Berthold Brecht, all had their start in the beer cellars of Munich and Berlin. Balieffs world-famous "Chauve-Squioris" (Bat) cabaret troupe started in the basement of the Moscow art theater as relaxation for the actors, tense after interpreting Chekhov, Gorky and Tolstoi.

In the new Paris cafe-theater, the audience pay no entrance fees but sit down at small tables to drinks at moderate prices. There ar usually two shows a night with around 60 spectators at each.

Paul McCartney Says He'll Always Be A Beatle

By Paul Backshall

LONDON

"I'm still a beatle and I always will be a beatle," says Paul McCartney.

McCartney, who now leads his own group "Wings" was speaking at a reception to launch the bands' latest record, which has already been banned by the British Broadcasting Corporation because the BBC thinks the lyrics are dirty.

"The Beatles thing happened and I was a part of it and I'm glad," he said. "The fact that it no longer exists as a group does not mean I've stopped being a Beatle."

He also says he found life boring after the break-up of the famous quartet from Liverpool which dominated pop music in the 1960s.

"You're out of work for a while and you think great. But you join another band. It's like anyone else with a profession, you leave one firm and you join another."

The other Beatles have tended to concentrate on writing songs and making an occasional record in recent months, but Paul went back on the road with a four-man group plus his American wife Linda.

The group, Wings, has been going through what Paul describes as a "running-in period" in Europe. "English and American audiences tend to be the most critical in the world, so I thought we would try out a few things in Europe."

The BBC ban on "HI, HI, HI," the groups new single, makes it two out of three of the groups' records that have been denied airspace.

I'm not really a controversial person," he says. In the case of his record "Give Ireland Back to the Irish" banned because of its political statement, he had "merely wanted to get over how I felt about the Irish thing." The record called on Britain to pull its troops out of Ireland.

"I like the Irish," McCartney said. "There are probably more of them in Liverpool than in Ireland. And the violence was getting a little too close to our own front door. So I felt I had to say something. Anyway, it was number one in Spain so somebody liked it."

The groups' next single was harmless enough -- "Mary had a Little Lamb" was an instant hit and contained not one hint of controversy. "People thought I was being very smart," said Paul. "They thought Oh, he's defying the critics to find anything dirty in a nursery-rhyme. But actually, I wrote the song for our daughter Mary. I just wanted to do something with her name in it."

But he was incredulous when the ban was slapped on his latest creation "HI, HI, HI."

It's such a great number," said Linda, trailing from Pauls' arm.

"Nothing political this time, purely a sex thing," said Paul.

Linda regards herself as "just a member of the band" and someone who is still learning as she goes along. "I was in photography before I met Paul," she said. "When he formed the group I wanted to be involved with it and started playing the piano and picking up things as we practiced more together. Just in the same way Paul and the others did when they first started the Beatles.

Most of Pauls' songs are now credited to himself and to Linda. "I help with a line here and there," she said. "When he gets stuck I pitch in with a phrase or a chord, or when he plays something I like I will say that's good, keep that."

During Paul's semi-retirement when the Beatles broke up, they spent much of their time on a farm in Scotland. "I began to feel like a real farmer's wife," she said.

"But now we are on the road (there's a British tour coming up in the new year) I'd like to become more beauty-conscious."

She looked down at her long, flimsy grey dress and then at her husbands' striking rartan trousers and red and white check shirt.

"I think I'd like a nice fur coat. I wear Paul's sometimes and its so warm. But I can't get used to the idea that the fur comes from those poor little animals."
